

Raymond Dick Named Star News Executive

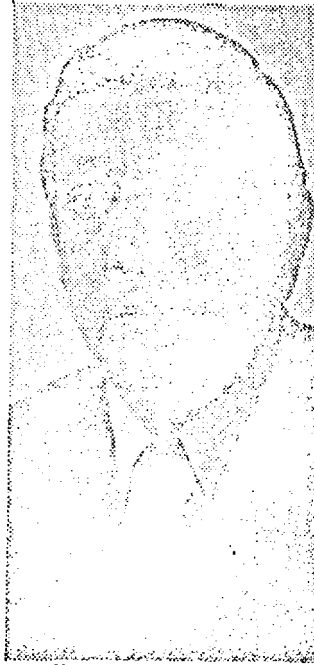

Raymond G. Dick has been named an assistant managing editor of The Star.

Dick, 46, will have as his primary responsibility the direction of The Star's night news operation. He also will be in charge of liaison between the editorial and production departments of the newspaper.

A graduate of Boston University, Dick was a reporter and editor at the Evening Gazette in Worcester, Mass., and an editor at The Sun in Baltimore before coming to Washington in 1964.

Dick was formerly chief of The Star's copy desk and has been serving as an assistant news editor. He is a former president of the Washington-Baltimore Newspaper Guild.

He and his wife have five sons and a daughter. They live at 3620 Majestic Lane, Bowie, Md.
